RURAL CRIME

Self-help booklet

What is Rural Crime?:

Rural crime has no universal definition, but it can be understood as the offences and incidents affecting rural communities and households. This can be financially, emotionally, and/or physically.

Rural crime is commonly organised into four categories:

- Agricultural – incidents affecting farmland, farm machinery and buildings, such as the theft of equipment.
- Equine – offences covering equestrian centres and stables, like theft of tack or equipment.
- Wildlife – wildlife crimes are committed when legislation protecting UK plant and animal species is breached. This involves poaching, cruelty against animals, or introducing invasive species into the environment.
- Heritage – encompasses offences which harm the historical, heritage assets of the British countryside, including churches and ancient monuments. Illegal metal detecting is also classified as a rural crime under this category.

What can you do?

Understand the Incident:

Rural crime encompasses many different incidents and offences. The first step may be to determine whether the incident you've experienced is a rural crime. To do so, see the above-stated categories and determine whether the incident you have experienced falls under one of them.

At the crime scene:

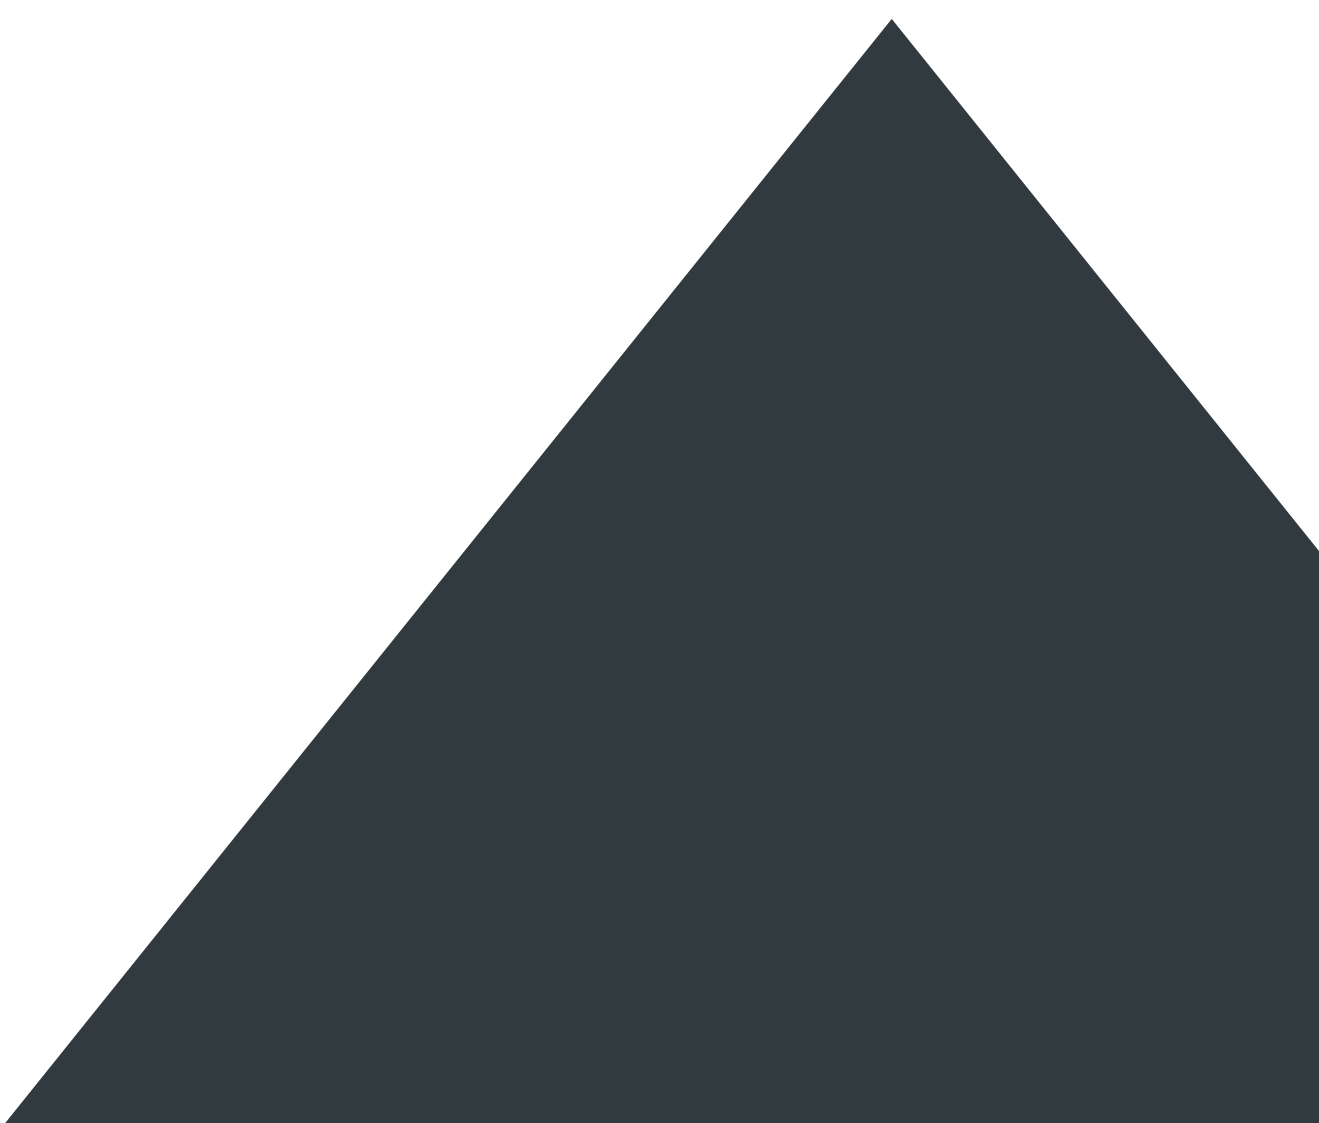

If you think a crime has occurred, try not to disturb the scene. If it is safe to do so, try to take a photograph or video of the scene and record any key details of the crime, such as registration plates of vehicles involved.

Join Community Networks:

Consider joining or establishing a local crime watch group to enhance security and raise awareness. Some groups have communication channels to keep each other informed of possible threats in the area.

Security Measures:

If you feel at risk of rural crime, there are several measures you can implement to protect your land, livestock, and property:

- Lock equipment and machinery away in a secure building when not in use.
 - Install burglar alarms.
 - Install outside security lights.
 - Keep all doors and windows closed when not in use.
 - Install CCTV cameras to cover the most vulnerable areas of your property.
 - Consider the use of warning signs to deter thieves.
 - Ensure that gates cannot be lifted, and their fixing bolts are secure.
 - Equine equipment can be security marked with your postcode, which would enable the police to identify your tack in the unfortunate event of it being recovered after it being stolen.
 - Ensure your livestock including horses and ponies are microchipped and the information is up to date
